BILL GOES TO GOVERNOR

Both Houses of General Assembly Accept Conference Report.

AMENDMENTS WEAKEN MEASURE changes. However, Are Acceptable to Educators, Who Declare Forward Step in Education in Virginia is Assured.

With two amendments, neither of which will nullify the measure, the compulsory education bill will go to Governor E. Lee Trinkle, both houses of the General Assembly having accepted a conference report yesterday. While weakening the bill to some extent, educators state that the amendments are acceptable to them and that the measure means a forward step in education in Virginia.

"Search of Haggage" in Dry Law Is Halled by Federal Direc-tor Fulwiler.

Bootleggers doing business in Richmond right from moonshine districts are without the "suit case screen" as a result of the new prohibition law enacted by the General Assembly, according to R. A. Fulwiler, director of the Federal prohibition forces in Virginia.

Assembly, according to R. A. Fulwiler, director of the Federal prohibition forces in Virginia.

Mr. Fulwiler pointed out yesterday that one of the provisions of the law enables prohibition officers to search suit cases without a warrant. He said that "rum-runners" in Virginia used automobiles to bring their product direct from the stills into Richmond, and placed the liquer in suit cases to conceal it. Mr. Fulwiler stated that the "search of baggage clause" was a wise one, for the bootleggers no longer could claim that their baggage could not be searched without a warrant.

Virginia's prohibition officers will receive full co-operation of the Federal forces in enforcing the new law, according to Mr. Fulwiler. The Fedgage without a warrant, and the Federal forces have been practically at a standstill greenily beserved.

From the Evening Dispatch of March 4, 1922 *** The loss today is largely by the forged in-dorsement and altered check. The crook changes everything except the geniune signa-ture, and seldom does the bank teller question it. He is only human. He has no way of knowing for what amount or to whom it was originally drawn; all he knows is the signature, and the changes are so neatly done that it can-not be detected. not be detected.

When a Richmond firm sends out of town a check which falls into the hands of a crook, who changes everything except the signature, and has it cashed at his bank, where he is in good standing, and this check is then paid by the Richmond bank, who is going to stand the loss? The law governs each case on its merits. It is a question of fact, not of law, and a jury usually gives the answer. Sometimes it is three years or more before the question is answered. In the means the desired that the same transfer is the desired to the same transfer in the meantime the depositor has his money tied up in litigation, aside from the expense.

The sad part of it all is that you -- the man with the bank account--are the loser by these frauds. The largest part of the losses is by the forged indorsement and the altered check, so it is EVERY MAN'S PROBLEM and NOT that
